CONFIDENCE

The police system of the United States, including all units from the federal department of justice down to the most obscure village constable, realizes the difficulty of making kidnapping an impossible crime. Intelligently and fearfully exercised, however, police authority can make kidnapping an exceedingly hazardous crime. That has been done.

Free of police interference, kidnapping would be easy. In most cases, the kidnapping victim's family and friends, more interested in his safety and return than they are in detection of the criminals, are urged to exclude the police until negotiations have been carried through. The natural objective is compliance with the kidnappers' demands.

This distinctive feature of kidnapping has been a great obstacle, but it is dwindling. Kidnapers, experience has revealed, cannot be trusted. It is, therefore, better to have the police called in immediately, instead of after negotiations for payment of ransom have been completed and carried through. Though still one of the most difficult of crimes to deal with and an impossible one to prevent, kidnapping has lost most of its attraction for the practical criminals who threatened to terrorize the country a few years ago. The game is ceasing to be worth the candle.

A CRUSHING BLOW

Few thoughtful Americans who had criticized the national recovery act were jubilant Monday when they heard the supreme court had ruled the bulk of the act unconstitutional. Though it was what many of them had hoped the court would do, they realized, possibly for the first time, the gravity of the situation in which the country now exists after two years of codes and regulations.

The court's decision on the recovery act was a crushing blow to President Roosevelt's administration. It was augmented by adverse rulings on the constitutionality of the Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage act and on the dismissal of the late William E. Humphrey as a member of the federal trade commission by President Roosevelt in October, 1933. The new deal's prestige will not recover easily from three so severe reprimands.

Its most controversial experiment has turned out badly, not only from the standpoint of an adverse judicial ruling but from the standpoint of practice. A favorable court ruling and continuation of the recovery act would not have made NRA better than it has been since June 16, 1933. It apparently had found its level of effectiveness. Whatever merit it may have had as an emergency measure was not great enough to create a demand for its continuation. The supreme court's ruling establishes that its merit, furthermore, was derived constitutionally. To defenders of the principles it embodied, this must seem as though a medicine had been declared ineffective on a legal basis despite what seems proof to them it effected a cure.

The danger of the court's ruling is the danger common to all decisions which run contrary to familiar practice. The country has grown accustomed to the provisions of the recovery act. It must adjust itself to a new condition. A certain amount of confusion is inevitable. There is a possibility the adjustment may be disorderly. In Washington and on Main street men will be uncertain about their next moves.

Several days will be required to become acquainted fully with the full significance of what has been done. Thereafter, it must be decided by President Roosevelt and his advisers what their future policy with respect to regulation of business will be. The supreme court has advised government that it cannot do certain things constitutionally. Government must decide whether or not it should attempt to continue trying to do the same things by other methods. There undoubtedly are some members of the Roosevelt administration who do not propose to let the supreme court stand in the way of reforms to which they are devoted.

Between the views of such men, representing a popular demand for sweeping changes in the American order in the hope of improving national conditions, and the position of the court, charged with the duty of measuring legislative means by the Constitution, lies a course wherein orderly progress is possible. The task, always doubly difficult in a time of unrest, is to find that course and abide by it. In the long view, the trial and error of the Roosevelt administration may be seen as having a salutary effect on the United States, however distressing the process may be from day to day and month to month. If men can keep their heads, if leaders can keep their vision and if together both leaders and followers can arrive at an understanding that successful democracy demands intelligent cooperation in the interests of all the people, then there will be nothing to regret in America's bloodless revolution of the 1930's.

THE STARS SAY

For Wednesday, May 29

A day of more than ordinary activity and liveliness is the forecast based on the prevailing lunar and mutual aspects of the planets. Indeed, a day of upheaval and excitement may be expected, together with the launching of important and eventually successful projects. This may instigate the breaking up of old conditions with the rearrangement of the surroundings, current interests and associates. Much enterprise and initiative are indicated, with surprising and possibly mysterious or intriguing developments. Those whose birthday it is may anticipate a year of great activity and progress, with new plans, projects, environs and associations. It is a favorable time for pushing in the direction of "big business" and advanced employment.

A child born on this day may be enterprising, resourceful, progressive and reactionary. It also may be moody, erratic and "peculiar" at times.
Notable nativity: Patrick Henry, statesman.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

NEW YORK, May 28.—Probably the most feared person among the professional traders of Wall street today is the youthful looking Joseph P. Kennedy, head man of the New Deal's securities commission. He has been a heavy speculator himself and knows all the answers.

He can spot any of the tricks by a mere glance at the prospectus. Kennedy in his early 40's, a brick-top, a Bostonian and save for horn-rimmed glasses might be taken for a football coach. He has none of the earmarks of the financier, yet is one of the shrewdest.

Several times a millionaire, he probably spends his government salary and more in telephone calls. He was planning to retire and relax when called to the new post. Instead, he is working 12 hours daily, harder indeed than ever before in a busy life.

He is the father of nine, a veritable range of human stair steps, and whatever off hours he has are devoted to his large family. It has long been his custom to take those old enough to a matinee every Saturday. He has homes in Washington, Boston, New York and Palm Beach.

Erskine Gwynne has chuckled the most auspicious of the champagne salesmanship jobs and buckled down to several magazine writing assignments. The wine-makers had hoped to capitalize Gwynne's Vanderbilt background as an introductory wedge for their fizzwater in the smarter boudoirs. Gwynne, a cherubic, silken voiced blond but a terror in a scrap, was long an American correspondent in Paris and launched a successful weekly of chit-chat there called The Boulevardier. The Yankee evacuation shelved it.

Telegram from Hollywood: Your fine understanding of our profession in the paragraph about the actor, five years jobless, going down hill with an air, prompts this wire. Thanks. Brooklyn, although it should be for sheer serenity, has never been a haven for writers. Many who began there soon migrated to Greenwich Village, Westport, Conn., or sundry cultural focal points. The sole exception I know among modern scribblers is the prolific and talented Faith Baldwin, who lives in a corner house in the Bensonhurst section. A mellow corner suggesting several locales of her stories.

Essayists have bespoke the bright bourgeois flair of Brooklyn's Fulton street. It has the clang and gusto of those hodge-podge back-drops in the Hoyt comedies. There is Schmalz, the long white-coated delicatessener, O'Ryan's saloon, Patsy's Beauty Salon, Fred, Your Pal and Druggist, Kip Wong, the laundryman who sits out front on a starch box gossiping and smoking his long-stemmed thimble pipe. I have a special reverence for Fulton. Out of its jumble came a girl who made me weep as never before in the theatre. It was just a small bit in a play called "The Noose" and elevated her to stage and screen stardom. The world knows her now as Barbara Stanwyck.

And they had to lead me out at the sobby line in "Way Down East" when the betrayed victim of the city chap crept home to fix a dinner for her stern old Dad. Seeing her he threw open the door to the storm and roared: "Out of my house, I'll have no dinner of your gittin'!"

Advice in Hernia Cases

RUPTURE is a common trouble. As a rule the sufferer is unaware of his trouble until the swelling becomes large, bulges and causes discomfort. Many times the presence of hernia is not suspected and is discovered by a health examination for insurance or some other reason.

I am sometimes asked whether rupture, or "hernia," as the doctors call it, is a hereditary affliction. This question arises because of the frequency with which rupture occurs in some families and its total absence in others. No doubt there are certain body weaknesses which are common to a given family. But it all depends upon what a member of this family is doing every day. It is more common among those who are engaged in strenuous work. But it may occur in persons with sedentary habits and whose work does not require severe exertion or physical strain.

Break in Tissues

As its name implies, rupture is really a break in the tissues, due to a mechanical weakness found in certain muscles of the body. Since the muscles in the lower front part of the body are subject at times to great strain, hernia most frequently is found in this region. Usually the weakness is present at birth, but no trouble occurs until a later date.

The victim of hernia first notices a bulging or swelling in the area mentioned. This swelling is likely to be painless, causing no particular discomfort. As a rule it can be made smaller by gentle pressure and when lying on the back it completely disappears. But it soon returns upon standing or walking.

I am often asked, too, if an operation is needed to overcome it. Operation is advisable because of the danger of "strangulation" of the hernia. The intestine pushes its way into the pouch and may be dangerously squeezed. In that event what shall be done is no longer a matter of choice. Immediate operation is necessary.

Truss Not a Cure

It is true that many a person has a small rupture and continues in good health for many years. He obtains relief by wearing a truss or other mechanical support. But let it be remembered that a truss never cures the hernia nor does it eliminate the danger of strangulation.

Since the operation for rupture is simple and effective, it is advised by authorities on the subject. In many instances the operation is performed under local anesthesia. Of course, the method of procedure can only be decided by the attending surgeon.

The operation for strangulated hernia is more difficult and complicated. Unless there is immediate attention, a portion of the intestine may become gangrenous—that is, the squeezed part actually dies. This means that in the operation a portion of the diseased intestine must be removed. Complication delays healing and prolongs recovery.

If you are afflicted with this trouble, talk with your doctor about it. He will advise you what, if anything, you need to do.

NEW DEAL PLANS FUTURE COURSE

Out of Wreckage of NRA,
Calls For Aid From Business

Effort to eliminate dishonest, fraudulent trade practices and unfair competition in over-working and under-paying labor." He said the decision "makes all codes of fair competition unenforceable as a matter of law; and in deference to that ruling all methods of compulsory enforcement of the codes will be immediately suspended."

Hope To Avert Strikes

Leaders of the United Textile Workers said immediate strikes would result if code and wages and hours were scrapped, while management and labor in the soft coal industry looked to a drive for special regulatory legislation to avert a general strike call that has been threatening for some time. President William Green of the American Federation of Labor called his leaders to a conference today.

Industrial leaders gave no indication that any immediate move would be made to modify labor or practice conditions. For instance, Alvan Macauley, president of the Automobile Manufacturers Association, expressed the belief the new ruling would not bring any material change in his industry. Hugh Johnson, the man who led NRA's first gigantic drive, pictured the new deal as in "black confusion at this moment" but insisted the principles could be written into a new law.

But any effort to do that had to reckon with such deadly enemies of the blue eagle as Senator Borah (R. Idaho) who said "the constitution has been saved," and Senator King (D. Utah), who uttered a fervent "thank God for the supreme court."

Although the high court's decision apparently virtually abolished federal regulation of the liquor business, an appeal was made to Congress for continued compliance with major code provisions pending legal studies.

May Revamp AAA Acts

Administration leaders moved to revamp the AAA amendments pending in congress, in an effort to give another of the new deal units from NRA's fate. Several AAA codes which like the federal alcohol control administration, derive their legal sanction from NIRA, seemed on first impression to have suffered a body blow.

While observers watched in the expectation that Attorney General Cummings would move to quash 400 NRA cases pending in various courts, Senators Black (D. Ala.) declared that the solution of the problem confronting the new deal was to adopt his compulsory 30-hour week law.

Chairman Walsh (D. Mass.) of the senate labor committee believed that the Wagner Labor relations bill, now going through congress with the blessing of the administration, would have to be narrowed drastically to purely interstate business. This would reduce its field of operations to a mere fraction of what its author, Senator Wagner (D. N. Y.) intended.

Senator Borah, a student of the Constitution, held that the high court decision definitely banned federal attempts to regulate interstate business. The high court said that congress may not reach into a community to regulate wages and hours in a business which only indirectly affects interstate commerce.

"We are of the opinion," said the court, "that the attempt through the provisions of the code to fix the hours and wages of employees of defendants in their intra-state business was not a valid exercise of federal power."

The other salient point in the decision was the ruling that congress illegally delegated its powers to the president in authorizing him to approve and promulgate codes.

A Review of the Day's News

By Arthur Brisbane

THE WEYERHAEUSER kidnapping proceeds along usual lines. The criminals send a "death threat" to kill the nine-year-old boy, unless $200,000 are paid over within a certain number of days. A white sheet is displayed outside the missing child's house, in fulfillment of some demand by the kidnapers, perhaps as a signal that their demands have been received and will be met.

TO KILL the child would kill the kidnapers' chance of being paid, for, after the Lindbergh case, no reward will be paid in any kidnapping, except on return of the missing person. Killing the child would also mean certain death for the villains involved in the crime.

The "G-men" or government agents, are sending no messages but this:

"If we get you, we shall kill you, without any if, or but and WE SHALL GET YOU."

LOYD GEORGE, who possesses more real statesmanship than any hundred other men in England combined, more than any ten hundred in this country, takes a cheerful view of Hitler's latest message. "The German demand for a 550,000 man army is justified by conditions surrounding him, according to Lloyd George, who emphasizes the fact that Hitler agrees not to use any weapons that other nations will agree to discard."

THIS IMPLIES that Hitler would wage war without use of airplanes, poison gas or submarines, if other nations would do the same.

Even the most hopeful of the angels above will scarcely count on that. Everything would be promised at the start of a war, perhaps, but gas and airplane factories would be busy "in case," and a "reason" for using their products would soon appear.

LOYD GEORGE, leader and victor in the last great war, has written a statement of historical significance, even though it may be too optimistic. He quotes as "the statement" a remarkable man, Hitler's words: "No people would ever ask for war, unless encouraged to ask for it by its leaders." These words by Lloyd George are aimed at France and Italy, and their leaders.

LOYD GEORGE describes elo-quently, changes in Europe caused by the appearance on the scene of a few men.

"When Adolf Hitler appeared on the scene as Germany's dictator the whole position in Europe changed. Germany, the down and out victim of the Treaty of Versailles, became the terror of its vicarious framers. But Russia, lead wolf of the Eastern steppe, became the cherished hope and ally of the West."

Pelard, the irreconcilable foe of Germany, became her only friend, and Italy, her only friend became her implacable foe."

INTELLIGENT MEN should read Lloyd George's most important statement, made public yesterday. You may trace in Lloyd George's utterance too great confidence in Hitler's willingness to forego the excitement and possible glory of another war, and find in it the remains of hostility toward allied leaders that disagreed with him at Versailles, as when he predicts failure for Mussolini's effort to encircle Germany in a ring of fire. But there is comfort for men that go to the trenches in Lloyd George's statement:

"There will be no European war—certainly not yet."

WHAT SEEMS hostility to Italy appears in Lloyd George's concluding words:

"In spite of bellicose utterances by the Italian duke, he will not act alone, for he has enough fundamental prudence to know it is an easier job to conquer Ethiopians than to fight Germans."

It is to be remembered that Hitler is an Austrian, not a German, and that Mussolini is the descendant of a race accustomed to bossing the world.

CANADA HUNTED FOR KIDNAPERS

Remnants of Karpis and Kelly Gangs Blamed
By Police

tives believed the kidnappings were effected by members of the two gangs who had banded together. British Columbia officers refused to disclose the identity of the Tacoma detectives.

The officers went north in response to a woman's report of seeing a boy who resembled the kidnaped youngster riding with four men in a travel-stained automobile last Saturday. That was less than 24 hours after George was abducted from a Tacoma street. A similar tip met with failure today when a posse of officers returned to Port Angeles, Wash., after an unsuccessful effort to trace an automobile containing a boy resembling the missing lad.

Continue Watch

Although they found no trace of the machine, with its three men and a woman, after combing all resorts in the Lake Crescent area, Port Angeles officers remained on the alert on the possibility the kidnapers had sought refuge in the sparsely settled forests of the Olympic peninsula.

Simultaneously authorities here became even more silent in their movements, perhaps in response to a plea from the distracted parents.

Officers of the captain of Tacoma police detectives were closed to everyone by officers. The state patrol doors leading to its headquarters, and for the first time since the kidnaping, department of justice investigators were conspicuously absent from police headquarters.

SPORTS Chatter

Saddle Star

ONE of the most popular of all jockeys, Linus "Pony" McAtee, is back in the saddle again after two restless years spent in retirement. Little Mac couldn't stay away from the riding game, though it is now more than 20 years since he had his first mount, and he is in his late thirties. The great little jockey quit riding a couple of years ago because he was bothered with stomach trouble, but a few dietary corrections fixed him up, and he says he now feels fine again. It isn't for any financial reasons that Pony is making his present comeback—he is comfortably well off, and doesn't need the dough he gets for booting 'em home. He just couldn't stay in retirement. Riding is in his blood.

Fred Perry

IN ENGLISH tennis circles they are beginning to worry a little over prospects of keeping the Davis Cup in the tight little isle for another year. With the cup defense looming nearer, the poor playing of Bunny Austin and the erratic work of the great Fred Perry are giving British net followers plenty to think about.

Perry, in particular, is somewhat on the spot at present. He was very much overestimated during his tour of the United States and Australia, losing quite consistently to the Anzac netmen. He is unpopular with the British tennis public because of his rather blustering ways, which don't conform to the English ideal of sportsmanlike behavior. Then, too, Fred did quite a bit of flirting with professional offers last winter, and the constant rumors that he was about to turn pro couldn't have helped his popularity with his fellow-countrymen.

Reports that that good-looking Britter had "gone Hollywood" during his stay in the film capital brought about a break between Fred and his fiancée, which resulted in more unfavorable publicity for the net king in England.

All these things cannot have helped Perry's state of mind, and it will be interesting to see how he performs at Wimbledon late next month.

ROSS-M'LARNIN BOUT TONIGHT

Welterweight Fight Expected To Bring Profitable Gate

NEW YORK, May 28.—Jimmy McLarnin, the one-time "killer" among the ring's little fellows, not only faces a whirlwind blast of blows tonight as he meets the challenge of Chicago's Barney Ross at the Polo grounds but the jinx that for years has pursued welterweight boxing champions.

Jimmy may produce sufficient punch to offset the danger of both factors over the 15-round route but the pre-battle odds seem stacked against him.

Ne 147-pound king has survived the first title defense in years. The day which has been particularly eventful in the Madison Square Garden bowl spilled McLarnin a year ago in his first defense of the championship he won by a knockout from young Corbett III.

Back Where Started
Ross, the successor, dropped a close decision to McLarnin three months later in the same arena, where it looked as if he had whipped the hoodoo as well as the Irishman.

They're right back where they started now, but not even last minute reports of McLarnin's weight, well inside the class limit, sufficed to alter the general view among experts that the champion is due for a licking. Ross ruled the 7 to 5 choice over-night to regain the title heights and settle the argument with "jarring Jim".

With both fighters in the proverbial "pink", indications pointed to a crowd of 35,000 and gate receipts touching $200,000.

If a bad turn of weather forces postponement, the fight will be set back to Wednesday night.

McLarnin and Ross step on the scales at the boxing commission's offices at 1 p. m. (Eastern Standard time). The show is slated to start at 7 p. m. with the main bout going on at 9 o'clock. No broadcast is scheduled.

Although McLarnin kept his weight a secret up to the last minute, the word spread among fight followers yesterday that the champion was "considerably" under the limit of 147 pounds.

Ross, who breezed through five rounds of shadow boxing and bag punching to keep himself on edge, has no weight worries. He will be around 140 when he crawls through the ropes.

United Cigars Win From Trade Class, 8-6; Mullins In Lead

Mullins Take Forfeit From American Legion Team; Baptists and Friends Win Church League Encounters

The classy Mullins softball troupe today still stood at the top in the Class A city league, winning again last night from the American Legion team on a forfeit.

The United Cigars won from the Trade Class club at Centennial park last evening, 8 to 6, as the "big smokes" got 10 hits off Pitcher Herron. D. Youtz smacked a homer to help the winners along.

The Cigars brought in four runs in the third inning and the Trade Class duplicated this in the fifth but were finally edged out.

The Trinity Lutherans and the Friends played a close battle on the church league diamond Monday. The Friends aggregation winning by one run, 8 to 7. A rally in the last two innings did the trick when four runs were chalked up.

More potted a homer for the Friends team as did Baker for the Trinity Lutherans. Harris connected for a triple for the losers.

Timely hits with the bases full was instrumental in the one-sided victory of the Baptists over the Presbyterians yesterday, 21 to 7. Hammett's three-bagger with the bases loaded and Snyder's double with three on were the big points in the game. Summaries:

"THE COLD FINGER CURSE"

by EDWIN DIAL TORGERSON

CHAPTER XXXVIII

McEniry's brow was furrowed as he talked over the new development with Montigny.

"It knocks the props out from under everything," grumbled the Inspector. "But I've said all along that this was anybody's murder. Why the deuce didn't we have sense enough to see it was Merriam? Of course he was out to crook this dame; that was his idea from the first day he went to work for her."

"The other men Callen named," said Montigny, "are they known to you—police records?"

"Yes, we know 'Jerky Joe' Lettermann is one of his aliases. Sick-up, payroll hand, pete man—he's done three stretches up the river, and he's a bad hombre. Snowbird—dope fiend, little guy, but hell-let-loose with a rod—he gets coked up when he goes out on a job. Pale blue eyes, almost no color in 'em, and he has a habit of making faces with one side of his nose, sniffing, you know."

"We don't know him under that name. But names mean nothing with a thief. We've known 'em with eighty aliases. We'll get both these birds, don't you worry. Callen ought to be able to help us, when he gets in tonight. I guess they couldn't get much out of him in Montreal because they didn't know what to ask him. Gosh, that was a break, nabbing that bird—with most of the stones on him, too. The Cold Finger Curse must have got him, eh, Montigny?" The Inspector chuckled warmly.

"We approach the end of our trail, apparently," said Montigny without enthusiasm. "One after another our excellent suspects topple over—or bob up again."

McEniry grinned. "But that's the way you said scientific detective work was done, isn't it—elimination? Well, just look who we've eliminated—first the negro maid, then Duane, then Thurber—I've got to get busy and turn that boy loose, by the way—then Valcour, then Cupples."

"Cupples?" interrupted Montigny. "Who eliminated him?"

McEniry laughed. "I did, Captain. I'll tell you a little secret. Cupples is my man. He works for me."

"Works for you?"

"I tried to keep it from you Montigny, but we've got to protect 'em, you know. He's one of our stool-pigeons."

"Stool-pigeon!" exclaimed Montigny.

"Nothing else. We use a lot of them in New York, Captain. I'm not so sure how your system works in Montreal, but we couldn't do business here without 'em. We get something on 'em—enough to send 'em up the river for ninety-nine years if we wanted to. But what's the use of having 'em do time in the Big House at the expense of the state, when they can be of real service to us here? They're in among the thieves, they join 'em in their merry little games—and they keep in solid with us by letting us know how the merry little games are going. The guy who said it takes a thief to catch a thief knew his copy-book, Captain. It's the only way, in a city big as this."

Montigny smiled politely surprised. "And he was there as Mrs. Elderbank's house to catch a thief?"

"Right again," said McEniry good-naturedly. "He was there for bait. Our boys were waiting for some of his former crooked associates to try to ring him in on a robbery. We knew Mrs. Elderbank was a marked woman—we had got wind of nice little plans to crib her jewelry. We knew it not only from what he heard from your Inspector Laval in Montreal, but from other sources here. The boys picked out the chauffeur, Cliff Spencer, for her, and they saw a chance to put Cupples in where he might do the most good. They fixed it with all the employment agencies when Mrs. Elderbank was ready to hire a butler—he couldn't miss getting Cupples."

"As bait," observed Montigny drily, "he was not much protection."

"The whole thing took him by surprise. He swears he didn't have a line on it, and I believe him. He told us you caught him tap-tapping over the telephone the other night—was talking to Darden. He reported that way sometimes when he couldn't get out to talk to one of our men."

Montigny gestured deferentially. "You fooled me completely, Inspector. I took him for a thief, but I did not take him for a Police Department thief. You trust him implicitly?"

McEniry shrugged. "You'd trust me, wouldn't you, if I knew by the drop of a hat you could send me to prison for the rest of my natural life? Sure I trust him. We never have any trouble with our stool-pigeons—except when the mobs get wise to them occasionally and start shooting. We've made it interesting for Cupples—he helps us and we help him."

The Canadian smiled reservedly. "And did Cupples have any theory as to the identity of the 'inside man' in the Elderbank case? Did he suspect Merriam?"

McEniry chewed his cigar thoughtfully. "Duane was his pick. He said so from the start, but I'm like you—I didn't agree with him. It was his idea that Duane had got mixed up with some of the thieves that hang around Barney O'Brien's night club, and—by the way—" The Inspector snapped his fingers. "Jerky Joe" Lettermann used to hang around O'Brien's—I just happened to think of it. That doesn't prove anything of course."

"Not enough to bring Mr. Duane as high in our esteem as Mr. Merriam," agreed Montigny. "It seems we shall have to be content with Mr. Merriam."

"Yeah, I'm going to have a nice, long, quiet talk with that bird, and see if he remembers anything he hasn't told us yet. But we'll wait and talk to Jack Callen first, tonight. Right now I'd better get to work and turn Thurber loose—before that fool girl spills anything to the newspapers."

"I can see now that it would be most unsafe for your friend the stool-pigeon."

"Unsafe? I'll say it would. Cupples would get his before the papers had been on the street an hour. I'll have to send somebody to have a talk with Cupples, by the way, about Jerky Joe and Gus Heinemer. Maybe he can give us a line on them. I'll let Darden ask to him. Go along if you like, Captain. You can tell him you're wise to his arrangement with us, if you want to, but I don't think that is necessary."

"No," said Montigny. "I do not think that it is necessary." In company with Sergeant Darden, he paid Cupples a visit at the Elderbank house late that afternoon. They had an extended interview with Cupples, but they got little information of value from him. Cupples maintained that he knew Jerky Joe only by reputation, and Heinemer not at all.

He was astonished when informed by Darden that a fence named

Jack Callen had been arrested, and that Callen had implicated Price Merriam.

"Mr. Merriam! Why, I can hardly believe it!" he exclaimed.

"Have you ever heard the name of Callen before—or Schurman?" inquired Sergeant Darden.

"Why, let me see. Not Schurman—I am certain of that. But it seems to me that some one named Callen had business with Mrs. Elderbank some months ago—quite a time ago."

"What kind of business?"

"That I could not say. I only remember, it seems to me, that a man named Callen telephoned one day when Mrs. Elderbank was out, and left his name and telephone number for her to call."

"Did you know he was a fence?"

"Oh, no. I had never heard the name before."

Darden and Montigny parted company at the end of a somewhat fruitless hour. "Looks like we're stuck for the time being, doesn't it?" said the Sergeant with a wry grin. "This bird Cupples has told us all he knows—I'm pretty sure of that. Tonight we may have better luck. Jack Callen comes in from Montreal. See you tonight, Captain."

On the sidewalk in front of Two-Sixty-Eight Waverly Place Montigny encountered Marjorie Clarkson and a friend of hers—the recently liberated Glenn Thurber.

They both hurried to shake his hand warmly.

"Here's the man," the girl told Glenn enthusiastically. "who really made them let you go—you put sense into their heads, didn't you, Captain Montigny?"

Montigny bowed with ceremony. "Unmerited thanks, Miss Clarkson," he remonstrated. "But I am grateful nevertheless. Mr. Thurber himself has done more than any other person, I think, to put sense in our heads, to set the fumbling police upon the right track."

"Where do you get that?" exclaimed Glenn. "I've been in jail. What have I done?"

"The Cold Finger Curse," said Montigny, in a tone that seemed to relish the words. "Administered by an able newspaper man, it has done much, and it will do more. It has demoralized our thieves, driven their fence to disaster—paralyzed him."

"Paralyzed?" queried Thurber quickly. "Who?"

"Ah, that is what I have to tell you—the story of another victim. I do not know as yet how much you can print of it. But shall we not go to dinner, we three, and talk it over?"

"We shall!" cried Marjorie Clarkson.

Jack Callen, like many of hand-to-hand thieves had gone berserk—confessed when the police favored him not one murder but two. With their interest, had been living "I floundered at first to have any of the refined and opulent life of doing to do with them," said the wealthy retired diamond merchant, in a faltering voice. It was known, of course, that the stenographer could hardly stonally he would buy stones—merely. But they threatened me with loved them so. Not until recently were they 'had things on' me, however, had he gone in for pilfering were desperate. They would fered ice on so large a scale. Not only had stopped at murdering me," had he consciously handled the 'we've heard that line before," proceeds of a robbery in which the Inspector McEniry curly, murder had been involved. That how long had you known Price he told the detectives who gathered him?"

Present at his bedside for the full confession he had promised were Inspector McEniry, Detective Sergeant Darden, Captain Montigny, Detective Mabry, a police surgeon, an assistant district attorney and a stenographer who took down every word he said. He had been told that his condition was extremely serious, he might never recover. If he made a clean breast of it all, the authorities, in view of his critical condition, would be inclined to leniency with him.

Callen had the thin, austere face of a student—a wary and wily student, to be sure—but not necessarily the countenance of a crook. His forehead was high, his hair gray and sparse. He was the grave demeanor of a scientist, or a professor of Greek. He had justified his diagnosis to himself, no doubt, by contending that, though his operations were without the pale of the law, yet his dealings within themselves were regular. He paid unquestioningly a fixed percentage of the appraisal which he himself put upon stones that were offered to him for sale, and his appraisal was that of an honest lapidary.

He was known in the underworld as a square-shooting fence. He made no inquiries regarding the recent history of the stones brought to him—he knew that he was dealing with rogues but he did not know, directly, how they came by their wares. He preferred not to know. A stolen necklace before being offered to him was broken up into its component pearls; the stones of stolen rings were taken from their bezels. It was safer thus for the thieves and safer for him.

But in the case of the Elderbank jewels there had been an exception. The entire lot, with the exception of a diamond and platinum wrist watch, had been turned over to him exactly as they were when stolen.

they were to be Mrs. Elderbank's—I had not seen her nor Merriam in months. I did not even know that they were in town. Then I read about her—murder—Callen paused, gasping. (To Be Continued)

Valiant Americans MEMORIAL DAY THOUGHT

The soldiers of three wars, who will march on Memorial Day, loved peace, but gave up the pursuits of peace, because they loved their country more.

It is the great wish of every American today that the future may ask no sacrifices of our sons, but we honor our brave ones, living and dead who did have the courage and patriotism to serve their country times of need.

Two feature pictures will be shown at the State theater Wednesday and Thursday.

The first picture has James Dunn as its star and is entitled "Daring Young Man". James Dunn, a New York newspaperman whose decided views on marriage, charm his tune when he meets Mae Clark, a reporter on a rival paper. A rapid-fire courtship is followed by plans for a quick marriage.

Dunn reports to his paper on a wedding day and is assigned to a madcap jail where privileged prisoners are allowed telephones, radio, cafe meals and occasional leaves. The paper wants an exclusive story on it in a hurry, so Dunn grudgingly goes to jail under another name, leaving his sweetheart at a church.

Over the radio, Dunn hears that Mae Clark, his fiancée, is to marry another man. He buys a parole for a few hours but is caught and put back in jail. Mae Clark learns of Dunn's predicament and goes to the jail, and is locked in his cell with him by mistake. Dunn finally gets his story and the girl.

The second picture on the double feature bill is the filming of a feature film in the section that his famous novel, "The Hoosier Schoolcrafts" enemies decide to have him master. Norman Foster has sent out of the way by a gang of title role with Charlotte Henry, a famous rider. ers in the school master's behalf and rescue him.

Charlotte Henry portrays the servant girl in the home where the schoolmaster boards and with whom he falls in love.

Tonight only the State will show

Una Merkel and Franchot Tone in a mystery comedy "One New York Night," filmed entirely in a large hotel. Una Merkel is a telephone operator and Franchot Tone a guest in the hotel. He goes from Wyoming to New York to marry a brunette and ends up marrying Una Merkel, who is a blond. There is a murder committed in the hotel and these two join forces to solve it.

NOW SHE GETS CLOTHES WHITER WITHOUT SCRUBBING

She'll be grateful to her friend every washday! For she told her about Rinso, and now she never scrubs—never boils. She just adds the wash in creamy Rinso suds, and it comes 4 or 5 shades whiter—safely. In fact her clothes last 2 or 3 times longer since she stopped scrubbing them! And Rinso is so easy on hands, so safe for colors. Millions use it for dishwashing, too—and for all cleaning.
